Introduction

Adaptation refers to the ability to adjust or change in response to new or different situations. In present times, adaptation has become increasingly important due to the rapidly changing nature of society and the world around us.

"The biggest mistake we could make is to become complacent." Jamie Dimon

In a business context, adaptation refers to the ability of an organization to change its strategies, processes, and systems in response to market changes, technological advancements, or other external factors.

"It is not the strongest or the most intelligent who will survive but those who can best manage change." Charles Darwin

In a personal context, adaptation refers to the ability of an individual to adjust to new or different situations, whether it be a new job, a move to a new city, or a change in personal circumstances.

"The principle goal of education in the schools should be creating men and women who are capable of doing new things, not simply repeating what other generations have done; men and women who are creative, inventive and discoverers, who can be critical and verify, and not accept, everything they are offered." Jean Piaget

Emotional intelligence plays a key role in adaptation as it allows individuals to understand and manage their own emotions and the emotions of others, enabling them to navigate change more effectively. Additionally, qualities such as persistence, collaboration, creativity, and flexibility are also important for adaptation as they help individuals to be more malleable and better equipped to handle change.

The "Knowledge Doubling Curve", was created by Buckminster Fuller in 1982. It established that the sum total of humankind's knowledge doubled between 1750 and 1900. It doubled again between 1900 and 1950, again from 1950 to 1960, then again from 1960 to 1965. The duplication rate is now down to days not decades.

In the current fast-paced world, adaptability is an essential skill for success both in one's personal and professional life. Individuals who can adapt to changing circumstances and environments will be better equipped to meet the challenges of the future.

Aspects of Adaptation

These twelve aspects make up the psychological and biological matrix of adaptation. When a new environment demands change, the excitement comes from our free will to decide how we face this change. Which aspect will we choose as our weapon? Each can work in isolation or in combination, there is no set order that they must follow, but once in play the person or object can not remain the same, a variation of the former must continue its journey forward. Reflect on these points, consider their interconnectedness and the transformative power they each hold.

5. Collaboration: The ability to work with others in order to adapt more effectively.
6. Communication: The ability to share information and ideas in order to coordinate efforts and adapt together.
7. Problem-solving: The ability to identify and address challenges in order to adapt.
8. Learning: The ability to acquire new knowledge and skills in order to adapt.
9. Innovation: The ability to come up with new ideas or approaches in order to adapt.
10. Persistence: The ability to continue adapting even in the face of difficult or uncertain circumstances.
11. Emotional intelligence: The ability to recognize and manage emotions in oneself and others in order to adapt effectively.

Biography

Born in Trentino in 1979, Claudio Gobber grew up in the magnificent valleys of Primiero and Vanoi. Inspired by the work of Trentino and South Tyrolean artists from a young age, with Riccardo Schweizer being the foremost among them, art has always been his Yin, while business was his Yang. He recognises himself as a sculptor, painter, photographer, and designer with a passion for new technologies.

After a period of studying in Milan, where he obtained a bachelor's degree and a master's degree in Advertising, he moved to London, where he lived for 10 years. During his time in London he was immersed in the world of photography, practicing the teachings of his photographer grandfather. This modern adventure was accompanied by regular sessions in the mountain studio where he continued to paint and sculpt.

More recently he has been working in Trentino, where alongside numerous acrylic works, a recent inclination towards creating clay sculptures has emerged. His art is strongly influenced by the digital works emerging from the Crypto movement, such as NFTs by international emerging artists, with a particular interest in the use of Generative Art software.

His artistic journey has encompassed both traditional techniques and digital experimentation, fueled by curiosity. He is constantly exploring various art forms. His aim is to push the boundaries of his creativity, producing aesthetically pleasing and conceptually stimulating works. His hope is to produce creations that evoke emotions, inspire reflection, and offer a unique perspective on the world around us.

His art has been exhibited in various national and international shows, and his work has been well received by diverse audiences. He continues to nurture his passion for art and seek new ways to express his creativity.
